CORPORATE CRIME REPORTER

NPR, Air America Nix Autism/Vaccine Book

19 Corporate Crime Reporter 17(1), April 21, 2005

National Public Radio wants nothing to do with David Kirby.

Air America cancelled him.

But the Christian Broadcasting Network wants him on.

Kirby is the author of the hot-selling new book, Evidence of Harm: Mercury in Vaccines and the Autism Epidemic: A Medical Controversy (St. Martin's Press, 2005)

The book is sympathetic to parents of autistic children who believe that mercury in vaccines is responsible, in part, for the recent upward spike in autism cases – from one in 5,000 in 1987 to one in 166 today.

Kirby, a former assistant to New York City Democratic Party officials, including former City Council President Carol Bellamy and former Mayor David Dinkins, says that "the right wing press has been all over this, and the left wing press won't touch it."

"NPR and the Public Broadcasting System get a lot of money from drug companies," Kirby told Corporate Crime Reporter. "And they need whatever money they can get, so they are not going to offend any advertiser – ever."

Whereas the major commercial networks have a little more leeway and play. They take more risks. The conservative press is anti-government, whereas the liberal press is so pro-public health – it is like the Centers for Disease Control (CDC) can do no wrong, doctors can do no wrong. It's like – the liberal Democratic Party establishment created this public health system that we are so proud of, and we are not going to attack it."

"On the left, support of government public health programs trumps hatred of drug companies," Kirby said. "And the right is a little more divided. You have the pro-business right – the Bill Frist and the Wall Street Journal editorial side – who are defending the drug companies at all costs. And then you have the real anti-government and anti-bureaucracy types who fear and distrust government and think this [the mercury/autism link] is entirely plausible."

Kirby said that while he has been interviewed by local NPR affiliates like WNYC in New York and WHYY in Philadelphia, "the national NPR has ignored this book, hung up on me, written me back and told me to take them off my mailing list."

"Never in 15 years as a journalist have I ever been treated like this by anybody – except for the CDC," Kirby said. (For a complete transcript of the 11-page interview with Kirby, see 19 Corporate Crime Reporter 17(7), April 25, 2005, print edition only).

In the interview, Kirby said that lawyers representing autistic children suing the vaccine makers will announce soon a new legal theory that the lawyers believe will allow them to proceed in federal court and bypass the federally mandated vaccine injury compensation program.

David Kirby, Author of

"Evidence of Harm: Mercury in Vaccines and the Autism Epidemic - A Medical Controversy"

~A Book Presentation in Manalapan, NJ on May 17th at 6 PM

David Kirby, author of the book "Evidence of Harm-Mercury in Vaccines and the Autism Epidemic: A Medical Controversy" will be appearing at the Manalapan Branch of the Monmouth County Library on May 17th, 2005 at 6 PM.

(PRWEB) March 14, 2005 -- The book explores the chilling possibility that mercury in vaccines caused an epidemic of autism, ADD, ADHD, speech delay and other childhood disorders in the United States. Kirby, a New York Times contributor and journalist for more than 15 years, has written a disturbing, important narrative that examines both sides of this brewing controversy-the personal stories of the affected families and the unfolding political drama in the courts and halls of Congress.

Evidence Of Harm is the saga of a handful of parents with autistic Children who, upon learning that their kids received levels of mercury in their vaccines that far exceeded Federal safety limits, set out to take on Big Business, Big Science and Big Government with a radical new theory on the cause. These parents have uncovered compelling evidence that vaccine mercury, in the form of the preservative Thimerosal, could very well have played a role in the disease. Now, Kirby explains how their medical, scientific, legal, and political allies are getting closer to establishing their claim.

Free Your Mind.....
From the Vaccine Paradigm

"When we give government the power to make medical decisions for us, we, in essence, accept that the state owns our bodies."
